The Episcopal Diocese of Florida Welcomes New Communications Director

The Episcopal Diocese of Florida is pleased to welcome Emily Stimler as their new Director of Communications. In this capacity, Emily will lead both internal and external communications strategies and will be responsible for developing and overseeing the implementation of the strategic marketing communication plans for the Diocese. She will also oversee all media relations, social media strategies, publications, digital communications, public relations and associate engagement.

Emily is a seasoned communications professional with over ten years of progressively responsible experience in the nonprofit healthcare industry. Emily joins the Diocesan office after a nine-year career at Flagler Hospital where she most recently worked as the Senior Manager of Communications and Patient Engagement. In this capacity, Emily was responsible for all communications efforts for their over 1,300 employees and 300 community physicians and also oversaw the hospital's marketing strategies, plans and programs to drive business growth. She developed and was responsible for all social media channels and served as the brand manager for the organization.

"I am thrilled to be joining the team at the Diocesan office and look forward to serving the community and furthering the mission of the Church," Stimler said.

Emily is a Jacksonville native and is excited to work and serve in the community where she grew up. She graduated from the University of Florida with a degree in Public Relations and a Business minor and later attended the University of North Florida where she obtained her MBA. In her free time Emily enjoys traveling, spending time with her friends and family, and experiencing all the Jacksonville has to offer.
